Community Health is a major in the College of Applied Health Sciences (AHS)

The College of AHS offers programs of study that:

- address some of society’s most critical health-related needs
- prepares students to enter careers that make a difference in the lives of others
What makes AHS special?

• Small college feel with large campus resources
• World renowned professors
• Students can start in their major classes as freshman/1st semester transfers
• We encourage applied experiences for students
• Opportunities for involvement with research
• Opportunities for studying abroad
• Personalized academic/career advising
• Opportunities for student involvement in each department and across campus
• Scholarships available through College and Departments
• Student organizations at college and major level
AHS has 5 majors

- Community Health
- Interdisciplinary Health (I-Health)
- Kinesiology
- Speech & Hearing Science
- Recreation, Sport, & Tourism
What is Community Health?

The health care industry is growing and changing. Health professionals must develop innovative theories, policies, and technologies to address emerging behavioral and environmental health concerns.

• The Community Health program prepares students for professional and research careers in the rapidly changing world of health and rehabilitative services, with special emphasis on the community context in which health care is delivered.

• A degree in community health will prepare you for leadership positions in a variety of healthcare and health-related professions.
